e first month of 1561) that Walter[19] proceeded to take Alice, his al wife. He had, it would seem, long kept Agnes out of sight (evintly in the top room of the tower at Sizergh) and in this he could ell have had influential help at Court. His father had been third usin to Katharine Parr. Moreover, Walter's mother, Katharine, idy Strickland, took as her second husband, in 1528 (between 9 n. and 29 Sept.) Henry Burgh of Gainsborough, Lincs., Esq., hen she was twenty-nine years old. He was second son of Edward, ord Burgh, who had several weeks before taken as his final wife, atharine Parr, a girl fourteen years younger than Lady Strickland, er cousin. Thus, as a grown woman, Lady Strickland styled a girl teen years old (the future Queen Katharine) "my good mother".[20] herein probably arose no little merriment between the two. Even ter the Parr girl became Queen, she will probably have remembered ie Stricklands with affection.

As for Ellen, daughter of Walter (and evidently of Agnes), she ay well have been baptized as "Eleanor" in compliment to Eleanor, ady Darcy, named above, ancestress of Walter and of his supposed ife, Agnes, as well as of Henry, Lord Clifford, Earl of Cumberland.

. Following his pardon in December 1536 Walter seems to have become an ultra conformist. Perhaps at the insistance of his grandmother, who had become Lady Gascoigne, Walter served on the juries which tried the northern rebels, his late companions, as did her husband, William Gascoigne of Cardington, kt., and Walter's cousin, William Parr, kt. The trials over, Walter proceeded to serve for several years in the skirmishes then raging on the Border. The Earl of Norfolk and Lord Wharton, both of considerable power in military affairs of those times took pains to name Walter rather favorably in their dispatches. On 12 July 1537 the Earl wrote Cromwell re Walter "who can serve with more men than any three in the book, a very toward young man, and a great friend of Whartons"; see work cited in note 16, above, vol. 12, part 2, p. 103, no. 248. This was high praise indeed for such a young man. Seemingly he was trying by exemplary fidelity to the King to obtain full forgiveness for the slight part he had played in the stirring events of the autumn of 1536. That he was never knighted suggests that there was some handicap other than the extremely minor part he played in the Pilgrimage of Grace. That handicap may well have been his marital connection with a member of a disgraced and ruined family; i.e., with Agnes Hamerton. No matter what influence Walter may have had with Lord Clifford, with Sir William Gascoigne, or with Katharine Parr, he well may have been unable to overcome the choler with which Henry VIII is known to have viewed the subject of "in-law" marriages. It is of some interest to note that on 3 March 1553 and again in 1563, Walter was fulfilling duties at Carlisle for the London government; see Patent Rolls, Edward VI, vol. 5, p. 417; and Archaeologia vol. 22, p. 69.

WILLIAM AULLS, PIONEER OF PLEASANT VALLEY, N. Y.

By Leslie A. Bryan, Ph.D., LL.B., of Champaign, Ill.

1. William[1] Aulls, born 21 Jan. 1748, died 23 Feb. 1816. He is believed to be the son of William Aulls (Aull), born 30 April 1730, died 16 Feb. 1806, and Elizabeth Calhoun, died 28 Sept. 1792. He married 11 Oct. 1772 Elizabeth Morris, born in 1746, died 17 Aug. 1823, the young widow of a sea captain. William and Elizabeth (Morris) Aulls are buried in the Pleasant Valley Cemetery near Hammondsport, N. Y.

Of Scotch-Irish ancestry, he came to America from Londonderry, Ireland, in 1767.[1] He returned to Ireland within a short time and came back in 1771 at the age of twenty-three, when he settled in New Jersey after a short period of teaching school in Boston.[2] He was a merchant and miller during his stay in New Jersey.[3]

About 1775 he decided to go to the vicinity of Lancaster, Pa., where he again engaged in the mercantile and milling business. During his stay in Pennsylvania he served during the Revolution with Capt. James Clark's Co., 6th Battalion of the Pennsylvania Militia.[4] Some time later he decided to sell his property and join a cousin by the name of Calhoun, who had come over with him on his second trip from Ireland and had settled and prospered in South Carolina. After liquidating his property William Aulls found inflation setting in and his continental currency became valueless. He gave up his plans to move south and subsequently decided to homestead in the "Genesee Country" of New York State.

In the spring of 1793 William Aulls, accompanied by his younger son Tom, a lad of sixteen, made the journey by horseback from his home in Drumore Township, Lancaster Co., Pa., to a locality called Pleasant Valley, between Hammondsport and Bath, N. Y., near the southern end of Lake Keuka. They built a small log cabin and planted potatoes and corn. Tom was left on the site by his father, who returned south for the rest of the family—his wife, stepdaughter, son, and six daughters. When nearing Pleasant Valley William sent his older son, Ephraim, over the hills by a short cut to join Tom. Ephraim found Tom sick, but with the arrival of the family in September 1793, Tom was soon restored to health.

William Aulls decided to settle permanently in the Valley, so he purchased 200 acres of land from the Pulteney Estate of England, through the resident agent, and thus became the first settler of Pleasant Valley.[5] He and his wife were among the founders of the Bath Presbyterian Church, and William was an elder in it in 1811. He was a commissioner of highways for the town of Bath in 1797.[6]

NOTES AND REFERENCES

1. The name Aulls is not found in Northern Ireland at the present time, nor does it appear to have existed there previously. It was probably spelled Aull in Ireland during the eighteenth century, since there is some evidence that the immediate ancestor of William Aulls was William Aull of Limavady, co. Londonderry. Earlier the name seems to have been spelled Aul and All. The 1790 Census, p. 131, lists him as William All.
